Description	The church of Sidcup was founded in 1844 with a modest Romanesque structure. After the growth of the area with the arrival of the railway, it was rebuilt in 1900 in early English style by the architect G. H. Fellowes-Prynne, with capacity for 1,000 people. World War II damaged its stained glass windows, which were restored by Sir Ninian Comper. Today, after recent renovations, it is still an imposing building with raised columns and remarkable stained glass windows. (Source of information consulted: stjohnsidcup.co.uk).
Bells	6 Bells in the tower, installed for “full circle ringing”, used for change ringing. Additionally, consecration bell to the right of the altar, which was previously in the bell room, on a still existing metal base.
